The number of these projected roads does not indicate any abatement in the contry is concerned. Indeed it is safe to say that at no time since the era of railroads fairly set in, has the popular feeling in the scope of country for a hundred ly aroused in favor of local roads as now. This feeling is attributable to the demon strated superior capacity and economy of more and more into adoption in hilly countries. The advantages both in building and working narrow-guage roads are so decided that there is a general inclination to introduce them as feeders to the standard track main lines.

The proposed scheme is to start a factory for the manufacture of ploughs, reapers, mowers, drills, fans, &c.

The idea is that the Grangers can manufacture these implements cheaper than they can buy them in large quantities already manufactured, which is doubtful. Heretofore their programme has been to confine their operations to simple purchases, and not to embark in outside business, which was certainly a safe policy. Once they go into manufacturing there is no telling what vicissitudes may befall the Granger organization. Such a step would be illegitimate, inasmen as the farming industry of the country cannot expect to monopolize the manufacture of all articles used by farmers. Why not manufacture their own clothes, shoes, hats, saidles, bridles, &c., as well as their spricultural machines?

The thing for Steubenville to do is to engage heartily in the project of making that vicinity the headquarters for the transfer of Youghiogheny coal from a irriver opposite that city. According to the Wellsburg Herald, Mr. Nat. Wells and others are agitating that project now. The plan is to build an incline on a large scale on the West Virginia side, about half a mile below the present railroad bridge, and make it the terminus of a railroad that shall run directly from the Youghiogheny and Monongalela coal fields, and convey all the coal that is now brought down through the locks to Pittsburgh for Cincinnati and points below.
